It doesn't matter whether you are using Photoshop in a design studio or in a classroom setting. The focus is the same: to give yourself the best chance at creating and manipulating your images in a better manner. Seeing how Photoshop works In this section, you find out about the basic features and functionality of Photoshop and how they fit together to help you understand how it works. You find out what the different screen modes are, and how they work, too. The Tools panel The Tools panel enables you to easily access almost all the functions and features of Photoshop. The palette on the left provides quick access to tools, and the panel itself provides more detailed information about a particular tool. You can view and change the Tools panel's size and location by following these steps: 1. From the Home tab, choose Window⇒Arrange. The Arrange window appears. 2. Choose the Options button at the top of the dialog box and deselect all other buttons except Size and Location. 3. Double-click the Size button to set a size for the panel (just like in any other window) and double-click the Location button to set the panel's location on your screen. A new panel appears with the current size and location. A pop-up menu appears when you click the Location button and gives you access to new options, if available. See the upcoming sidebar "Looking at menu options," for a discussion of this menu. 4. Click OK to close the dialog box. The Tools panel is now the size and location you specified. Image modes In this section, you find out about the different ways that you can see and work with your images in Photoshop. The way you create images in Photoshop depends on whether they're grayscale or color images, and whether they're to be printed or displayed on a computer monitor. The next few sections introduce the three different choices you have. Working with grayscale images In the following sections, you explore the three image modes available in Photoshop:

Grayscale, RGB Color, and CMYK Color. Grayscale images are images that have no color information, just a black or a white to represent all the shades of gray between those two extremes.

Grayscale images can be created as four-color (4-color) grayscale images, RGB (red, green, blue)

When we used Photoshop a few years ago, the beginners knew how to use the interface, but now you might get into a situation where you're confused. Here we will teach you, a few tricks and shortcuts to work faster in Photoshop. By the end of this post, you will be able to edit images easily in Photoshop. That said, let's begin. Embed the below code on your blog or website. It uses CSS to make images fit to a small size, which is useful for high-resolution photos that don't break. a681f4349e

Manresa Triptych I've been meaning to do something with my Manresa set for a while and wanted to wait until I had made a quilt with it. Well, I finally made a quilt! And I made it while in the midst of moving. It's a really scrappy quilt made with leftover fabric from other quilts that I was just going to throw out. I made each block separately and then pieced them together to form the quilt top. The four sections are quilted with a butterfly stitch, but then the quilt is bound with the chain pieces along the perimeter. This is one that I'm happy I got done so that I know there will be a quilt ready to wrap the little one in. I also used a little bit of leftover fabric from one of my other Manresa quilts to make the binding for this one. I followed the instructions on the label, making one long binding strip and cutting it into five 1" wide strips. I did the same on the other side as well. I love the little flowers on the Manresa quilts, so I had to include them on this one as well. I made a very small version of this quilt in July for the Sew Much Patchwork. We traveled a lot when the little one was born and I didn't get to a quilt shop much in the months just after she was born. I've been really wishing I'd bought some batting and gotten started on those Manresa blocks, but as I was making her quilt top I thought, "Well, there's always next time!" "You have just been bitten by the quilting bug! I wish I had known. I would have tried to get you started on that quilt a little sooner." I like the challenge of making a quilt without a sewing machine! But hopefully in the next few months I'll get back into sewing, I'll be starting college next week, and I want to build my quilt stash. 2 comments: Oh, yes, there should be more catching up to do. Did you make the baby blanket from that issue of Sew Much Patchwork yet? I love your Manresa quilt, and the binding is so pretty. I'm not sure about cutting individual binding strips, but I think I'm going to look up how to do something similar to that. Thanks for sharing

Homeless intervention North Carolina A new program that helps bring food, clothing and shelter to youth who experience homelessness in school will be launching at two Winston-Salem, N.C., school systems. The North Carolina Department of Education will begin sending school-based teams of volunteers to three of the state's 100 largest school systems to provide services including food, clothing and shelter to students who experience homelessness. One team will be in Guilford County, the other in Forsyth and one in Wake. The three teams will make up the inaugural program, which is known as School Homeless. The initiative was put together in collaboration with the North Carolina Department of Public Safety, to target students most likely to experience homelessness. This will be the first time North Carolina has engaged school-based volunteers to help homeless students. The School Homeless team would be jointly staffed by the department's social services division and the district's Division of Law Enforcement. The North Carolina Department of Public Safety believes that information on juvenile non-felony offenses allows DSS to better understand vulnerable youth populations and for DSS to more effectively provide services and prevention initiatives.

These documents were created with the goal of providing transparency and are intended as a high-level overview of the information compiled by DSS for use by DSS partners, juvenile justice courts, school officials, juvenile probation officers and others who work with DSS-referred youth."Shaky, trembling hands are more than an aesthetic choice; they can actually be a sign of Parkinson's disease (PD). Researchers from the Universities of Sheffield and Edinburgh found that the condition is more common in people who lack body control. The researchers also found that the trembling is due to an irregular fluctuation in the firing of a brain region called the cerebellum, which is involved in planning and learning movements." [Source] Leg movements have shown to be predictors for Parkinson's disease (PD). An experiment was conducted where patients were asked to either walk or perform arm movements. Their movement was then mapped and compared. The results revealed that patients with PD would have more tremors when performing the arm movements while healthy people were more likely to have tremors during the walking movements. The study was published in the Journal of Clinical Neurology. [Source]
