I asked him to try to put it off as much as possible and, while it's not a question I would ask myself, it is personal enough for me that I am willing to spend 5 minutes on it. I was hoping he'd give me a few days to look into it so it would be more under his control. Instead, he posted the question right when I was about to leave for lunch and that was only 3 hours ago. I'm not opposed to helping him, I just feel like he's rushed the problem. I understand that this sort of thing is the sort of thing the mods have to deal with, but I'm wondering what other options are available to me? A: If you can wait 1 day, then do it. You should probably start asking your friend what's going on with him, but it seems odd that you're being asked to help a friend in this way. If you can't wait 1 day, then you can probably ask to chat about it with your friend, and explain your position to him. That may work, but the friend may still ask you to do it, and if you start explaining your position you're in a different situation. If you can wait 24 hours or more, you can probably just let it go. A: Your friend has asked you to help, which is pretty clear. I would take the opportunity to discuss some "family rules" with him. For example, are you allowed to solve his personal problems on work time? If the answer is no, then he's asking you to do something that you're not supposed to do, so it's no longer "personal", but work related. If he's got a reason for asking, it's still work related, but you are in the right to ask. Yes,
