? A: The problem is caused by the bad download of the.zip file from fileoffree.com. You should download the file from wefileoffree.com. 2014-09-26 "Unexplained" signals detected on JWST, TESS Credit: NASA/JPL NASA has issued a press release that explains what they are calling "Unexplained" signals detected on the JWST from an area called 2MASS1207-3932, during operations during a normal day. The first of the two signals is called "TESS noise". It was found at about 538 hours on September 26th, 2014 and continued from that point and for the duration of the total space craft operation. This type of signal is found in about 30% of all the JWST observations and has been previously explained as a noise induced by thruster firings. The second signal is called "Unexplained and quickly varies and is stable, after about 7 hours of observation." This signal was found in the second observation sequence, beginning at 510 hours. So, the conclusion is that both signals are actually noises, and the observed, stable, unexplained signal is really simple due to an unstable part of the spacecraft electronics or light from the Sun hitting the spacecraft, just like the camera is blacking out when it's pointed at the Sun. So, there is no evidence of intelligent life, SETI must be trying to contact a UFO in the form of a satellite, or a sophisticated space probe. I'd have taken that as a reference to Heaven's Gate but no, this is much better. Illumination is widely used in many aspects of human life, and along with other positive aspects of technological progress, illumination has created more convenient places to work, study, and live. However, with light pollution and the possible dangers associated with this phenomenon, lighting devices must be designed to effectively decrease the amount of light that is shed on the surroundings, especially outside of the lighting devices' own areas. In the past, lighting devices that were designed to reduce light emitted in the surrounding area typically used a reflective panel, such as a series of panels positioned at various angles, on the exterior of the lighting device. These panels would redirect light from the light source emitted at a horizontal angle to a vertical angle, thereby preventing light from being emitted at a significant horizontal angle 3e33713323
